Doesn't the name just roll off the tongue? Isn't it fabulous? Don't you want to know what GhettoGloss is? Because it's not just a gallery. It's a "portal giving access to the infinite world of art and imagination in a functional capacity." What does that mean? Well, first of all, GhettoGloss does show art by many talented people—among them Mark Mothersbaugh, Clive Barker, and Tobias Keese—and by some obscure people who will be famous very soon. But better, GhettoGloss actually leases fine art from its permanent collection for cameo appearances in movies and TV, music videos, fashion shoots, and even plain old parties. And its network of on-call artists confront creative emergencies head on and can bring to life, in accordance with your exact specifications, any concept you throw their way. Guess that's what a "portal" is. Walk this way.
